Muslim Ansaris in India

The Ansaris were traditionally silk weavers. They now involve themselves in small businesses throughout India. Ansaris are a supportive and friendly people, as implied by their name, which is Arabic for “those who support.” Yet they try to remain a distinct people by guarding who marries their women. Ansari women are noted for wearing bangles and beads, and in some communities, they wear glass bangles, which signifies that they are married.

Ministry obstacles

The pressure of the Ansaris’ community can keep a member from making a commitment to Jesus Christ.

Outreach Ideas

Believers can choose to be regular customers of an Ansari family. That would give them the chance to introduce these friendly people to their Savior.

Prayer Focus

Pray that God would send many Indian followers of Jesus to these Muslim neighbors with a heart to befriend them and lead them into Christ’s abundant blessings. Pray that Ansari
